Dear Mr. McCarter,

Please excuse this delay in thanking you for your informativeness. I've not been well. I was so startled by that unusual exchange I returned with <sup>out</sup> the information ~~a~~ need to identify it. I'll appreciate knowing what it is called, who manufactures it and where, its dimensions and the size(s) of what it produces, the speed of reproduction, and how reproduction is triggered and the means of reproduction. What the manufacturer provides will be adequate.

As I thought of this after we left I could not believe that so small an enlargement process could satisfy the needs of the National Archives and that despite the fact that is the enlarged with it equipped your division it had and was able to serve its remaining need for greater enlargement.

Even if it did not do it within the Archives but, as perhaps, commercially, I also believe that it is required to respond to inquiries like mine, which is impossible with what you demonstrated to me.

I therefore ask that you ask about with the Archives and have it resort to the enlarging services it uses for larger enlargement that the tiny enlargement that is so impressive in speed and so impressive on content.

You know what information I seek.

It was kind of you to take the time you took and I do thank you for it, sincerely.

Harold Weisberg
